

Chris Naylor FMHC

Chris Naylor works at the health charity, The King's Fund. He is passionate about mental health and the role that public services can play in improving mental health and wellbeing.

He has a particular interest in the link between mental health and physical health, and has published research examining the case for strengthening mental health expertise across all parts of the NHS. His recent work explores the relationships between community, health and place.

