

Nick Webb FMHC

Dr Nick Webb is Programme Director for Innovation Unit's new £3.4M Big Lottery funded 'Living Well UK' programme, which will see four places in the UK adapt the Living Well system of mental health provision from Lambeth in south London.

Nick began his career in local government with the London Borough of Camden, where he first led housing strategy and then the Council's approach to engaging with and investing in its local third sector. During his time in local government he pioneered new ways of thinking about housing services in terms of wellbeing and led the development of some of the country's first outcomes based models of commissioning and grant making.

Nick managed the Cabinet Office Innovation in Giving Fund at Nesta before joining the national office of Mind, the mental health charity, where he led innovations in organisational development support for the federation of +150 local Mind associations. This included co-designing and delivering a cutting-edge leadership development programme for senior Mind leaders.

Within mental health, Nick wants to work with others on suicide prevention and bereavement support and developing better ways of supporting children and young people.
